And today's financial tip:

What is a trade?

In securities markets a trade is a transaction involving one investor buying a security from another investor. For example, Tom may have 500 BON shares to sell and at the same time Jane may want to buy 500 BON shares. If Tom and Jane come together, agree on a price for the BON shares, and exchange money for securities then a trade has taken place. In some markets Tom and Jane may have to find each other directly, while in other markets – like ours – this happens through a securities exchange that brings buyers and sellers together.
